

Quality of Life

We all want a great quality of life:

- To feel great every morning
- To be able to do the things we want
- To look great and feel strong at any age

Our complex bodies depend on trillions of cells. To live and function well, each cell must be fuelled properly. And when our cells are healthy, so are we.

Nutrients in Our Diets

The primary fuel for our bodies comes from nutrients in the food we eat—without them, a high quality of life stays beyond our reach. According to the Australian Bureau of Statistics National Survey 2004/05, 90% of Australian's did not consume the recommended amount of fruit or vegetables in their diets.

Even when we try to eat right, we find that today's fresh produce may contain far fewer nutrients than the produce of our grandparents' days. Modern farming techniques have shifted the focus from quality to quantity. Some scientific research indicates that you'd have to eat almost 10 oranges to get the same level of vitamin A that your grandparents got from one orange. Two peaches in 1951 supplied the RDA of vitamin A for adult women. Today, a study suggests that would take 53 peaches!

It's no wonder that some of us may no longer understand what "feeling great" really means. Mannatech delivers the gift of hope for a better quality of life.
